If you've ever watched a baseball game with a friend during the summer and your friend knows the score or the scorekeeper for some other reason, you'll get what this post is about. If you are fortunate enough to be friends with anyone who lives in or near Chicago, that person would probably know this person. We've all met this person. This person's name is Jenkins. They have a very, very common name. So common, in fact, that the most common first name is actually that of a basketball player: Bob Jenkins. But no, the Jenkins I'm talking about are not that at all. In fact, the Jenkins I'm talking about started a baseball blog. Specifically, a pro-hitter blog. Yes, the real Bob Jenkins, the Chicago Cubs baseball player, is a blogger. Yes, he's a great guy. Jenkins is, to this baseball fan at least, one of the most underrated members of the Cubs team. On this site you can read about Jenkins and the Cubs, enjoy some of his truly great videos (and I'm not just talking about his videos about the Cubs), and learn a thing or two about baseball. For anyone who's been to South Carolina, you might see a lot of the same people wearing the same Carolina blue jacket. The same is true in South Dakota. For South Dakota's part, you'll know the result of the elections: The drama wasn't finished, however, as it appeared one of the 53,723 people who voted for Obama didn't actually get in. He told a South Dakota television station that he had been incorrectly told the polling place was in Sioux Falls and not in Rapid City, which is located farther away. "It's a bummer," he said. "There's a good chance I won't have to make the required $10 contribution [to political parties]. I'm not a big political donor." I voted today (early, as it was before noon), and I imagine that South Dakota 6d1f23a050
